The Renaissance (c1350–c1550)

The word Renaissance means rebirth in French. The Renaissance was a period of artistic and cultural achievement in Europe from the fourteenth to the sixteenth century. It was characterized by a number of distinctive ideas about life, specifically secularism, individualism, humanism, and materialism. The spirit of the Renaissance influenced European society for generations, making the Renaissance truly a golden age in European history.

If the Renaissance was a rebirth of culture, you might think that the period before the Renaissance was one of gloom and darkness. Actually, historians have shown that the Medieval Era, or Middle Ages, did produce art, architecture, literature, and other ideas in law, languages, and economics that influenced Europe in the fourteenth century and provided the foundation for the Renaissance. However, during the Middle Ages, writers and philosophers viewed society as a preparation for the afterlife. Renaissance writers were interested in the present or secular world.

The table below explains some of the important differences between the Middle Ages and the Renaissance:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Differences between the Middle Ages and the Renaissance</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Middle Ages</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Purpose of art</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Politics</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Society</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Religion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Education</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Italian Renaissance

The Renaissance began in Florence, Italy, and subsequently spread to the rest of Italy and then to Northern Europe. Unlike other areas of Europe, Italian cities had survived the economic crises of the late Middle Ages. Italian towns had remained important centers of Mediterranean trade and boosted their production of textiles and luxury goods. Furthermore, Italy was the center of ancient Roman history. Architectural remains, statues, and amphitheatres were visible reminders to Italians of the “Glory of Rome.”
The Italian City-States

At the time of Renaissance, Italy was made up of numerous city-states that were geographically situated to benefit from the revival of trade that had developed as a result of the Crusades. The northern city-states of Florence, Venice, and Genoa acted as middlemen in the lucrative trade with the East. These Northern independent city-states marketed goods such as wool, silk, and other products to countries in Europe and Asia. They became prosperous centers of banking, trade, and manufacturing.

The cities of Northern Italy also benefited from being able to absorb stimulating new ideas from their advanced Byzantine and Muslim neighbors on the Mediterranean Sea. By 1350, the city-states of Florence, Venice, and Genoa were urban regions with a population of about 100,000, a large figure by medieval standards. The conditions were right for these cities to undergo a cultural explosion.

At the height of the Renaissance, several city-states, including the Republic of Genoa, the Republic of Florence, the Duchy of Milan, the Venetian Republic, the Papal States, and the Kingdom of Naples, were important. Within these city-states, merchants used their wealth as stepping-stones to economic and political leadership. Bankers made loans to kings and supported other commercial ventures that contributed to economic growth across Europe. Men like Francesco Sforza in Milan and Cosimo de’Medici in Florence, who gained power because of their own merit and not based on birth, became sponsors of the arts. They began to realize that their wealth enabled them to enjoy the material pleasures of life as well as fine fashion, arts, and architecture.

Florence: The Symbol of the Renaissance

Florence, the most dominant of the Italian cities, became known as the symbol of the Renaissance. Like ancient Athens, Florence attracted people of talents from other Italian city-states. The Quattrocento, a common historical term for the Golden Age of the Renaissance, began in the 1400s when the Medici family of Florence exerted power over that city. The Medici family was a merchant family who amassed a fortune in the wool trade and expanded into banking. It provided Florence with political and artistic leadership.

Through marriages, the Medici family became affiliated with the major houses of Europe. Besides acquiring the “Grand Dukes of Tuscany” title, the Medici family produced three popes (Leo X, Clement VII, and Leo XI), two queens of France (Catherine de Medici and Marie de Medici), and several cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church. The rise of the Medicis in Florence coincided with the triumph of the capitalist class over the guild merchants and artisans. The Medicis also exerted control over the government without holding any permanent official position, ruling Florence as part of the Grand Duchy of Tuscany until the 1700s. However, the Medicis were driven from power and expelled from Florence three times: in 1433 to 1434, from 1494 to 1512, and from 1527 to 1530. The attempts (such as the Pazzi conspiracy of 1478) of the Florentine republicans to restore the former liberties ultimately failed because of the Medicis’ wealth and connections.
In 1434, Cosimo de’Medici (1389–1464) took control of the government of Florence. He was a shrewd political leader who was also the wealthiest man of his time but chose to rule Florence by staying behind the scenes. He controlled local politics by insuring that all eight members of the city council were loyal to him. He ruled for thirty years as a dictator and won the support of the people by championing popular causes.

Lorenzo de’Medici (1449–1492), Cosimo’s grandson, also known as Lorenzo the Magnificent, was a clever politician who never held any public office but ruled with absolute control behind the scenes. Lorenzo represented the Renaissance ideal. He was a generous patron of the arts who saw the beauty of present life as complete fulfillment. Poets and philosophers visited the Medici palace. Lorenzo, who wrote poetry, supported artists such as Michelangelo (1475–1564) and Botticelli (1445–1510) and encouraged them to visit Florence.

Lorenzo’s son, Giovanni de’Medici (1475–1521), who became Pope Leo X from 1513–1521, was also an important patron of the arts. He is remembered more for his interest in art than as a pope. He was a patron of the genius Raphael (1483–1520), who was one of the Renaissance’s greatest Italian painters. Raphael painted a number of Madonnas, mostly during his time in Florence. Giovanni also promoted the rebuilding of St. Peter’s Church in Rome.

Humanism and Society

The defining concept of the Renaissance was humanism, a literary movement that began in Italy during the fourteenth century. Humanism was a distinct movement because it broke from the medieval tradition of having pious religious motivation for creating art or works of literature. Humanist writers were concerned with worldly or secular subjects rather than strictly religious themes. Such emphasis on secularism was the result of a more materialistic view of the world. Unlike the Medieval Era, Renaissance people were concerned with money and the enjoyment of life and all its worldly pleasures. Humanist writers glorified the individual and believed that man was the measure of all things and had unlimited potential.

Humanism had far-reaching effects throughout Italy and Europe. The advent of humanism ended the church dominance of written history. Humanist writers secularized the view of history by writing from a nonreligious viewpoint.

The Humanists also had a great effect on education. They believed that education stimulated the creative powers of the individual. They supported studying grammar, poetry, and history, as well as mathematics, astronomy, and music. Humanists promoted the concept of the well-rounded, or Renaissance man, who was proficient in both intellectual and physical endeavors.

Humanist writers sought to understand human nature through a study of classical writers such as Plato and Aristotle. They believed that the classical writers of Ancient Greece and Rome could teach important ideas about life, love, and beauty. The revival of interest in the classical models of Greece and Rome was centered primarily among the educated people of the Italian city-states and focused on literature and writing.
During the Middle Ages in Western Europe, Latin was the language of the Church and the educated people. The Humanist writers began to use the vernacular, the national languages of a country, in addition to Latin.

Some important Italian Humanists are:

- Giovanni Pico della Mirandola (1463–1494) was an Italian who lived in Florence and expressed in his writings the belief that there were no limits to what man could accomplish.

- Francesco Petrarca, known as Petrarch (1304–1374) was the Father of Humanism, a Florentine who spent his youth in Tuscany and lived in Milan and Venice. He was a collector of old manuscripts and through his efforts the speeches of Cicero and the poems of Homer and Virgil became known to Western Europe. Petrarch’s works also led to the rise of people known as Civic Humanists, or those individuals who were civic-minded and looked to the governments of the ancient worlds for inspiration. Petrarch also wrote sonnets in Italian. Many of these sonnets expressed his love for the beautiful Laura. His sonnets greatly influenced other writers of the time.

- Leonardo Bruni (1369–1444), who wrote a biography of Cicero, encouraged people to become active in the political as well as the cultural life of their cities. was a historian who today is most famous for The History of the Florentine Peoples, a 12-volume work. He was also the Chancellor of Florence from 1427 until 1444.

- Giovanni Boccaccio (1313–1375) wrote The Decameron. These hundred short stories were related by a group of young men and women who fled to a villa outside Florence to escape the Black Death. Boccaccio’s work is considered to be the best prose of the Renaissance.

- Baldassare Castiglione (1478–1529) wrote The Courtier, which set forth the criteria on how to be the ideal Renaissance man. Castiglione’s ideal courtier was a well-educated, mannered aristocrat who was a master in many fields from poetry to music to sports.

Humanism and Women

Humanism represented some advances for women. During the Middle Ages, few women could read or write outside of the convents. In the cities of the Renaissance, upper-class girls received an education similar to boys. Young ladies studied the writings of ancient Greek and Rome. Some women could also speak one or two modern languages such as French or Spanish and a small minority achieved some fame. In the latter sixteenth century, at least 25 women published books in Italy. Laura Cereta (1469–1499) reflected the success and failure of humanist women. Educated in a convent, she learned languages, philosophy, theology, and mathematics. However, by 15, like other educated women, she had to choose between marriage and full participation in social life or to study and withdraw from the world. Although Cereta chose marriage, she was widowed after only eighteen months of marriage and spent the remaining twelve years studying and withdrawing from society.
Although some Renaissance women were better educated than their medieval counterparts, their education prepared them for the social function of domestic or home life. They were expected to use their education to run a household. Educated men, however, were supposed to know how to rule and to participate in public affairs. The ideal was different for men and women. The ideal woman offered balance to man. She was vibrant but not too reserved. She also had to be beautiful because that was a sign of goodness.

Spreading Humanism

Two inventions helped spread the ideas produced by the Humanists across Italy and the rest of Europe. About 1450, Johannes Gutenberg (c1390–1468), a German printer, invented printing from a movable metal type press. The first European book printed by machine was the Gutenberg Bible (1456). With the Gutenberg Bible, the European age of printing had begun. As compared to the medieval practices of hand copying or block printing books at a tediously slow pace, the movable type press tremendously increased output and decreased costs. As books became more readily available, more people learned to read and write. The increased circulation of books by Italian writers helped to spread more of the ideas of the Renaissance to other parts of Europe.

Northern Renaissance

In the last quarter of the fifteenth century, the ideas of the Italian Renaissance spread to Northern Europe. Northern writers interpreted Italian ideas and attitudes towards the classical antiquity in terms of their own traditions. These writers in Holland, England, Germany, and France were more Christian, or at least more pious, than those of Italy. The secular and pagan themes of Greece and Rome received more attention from the Italians. In Northern Europe, the Renaissance had a distinct religious character and stressed biblical and early Christian themes along with the original works of the classical world. These writers tried to create a more perfect world by combining the best elements of the ancient world with Christian culture. Unlike the Italian Humanists, who stressed secularism and individualism, the Northern Humanists focused on broad programs of social reform based on Christian ideals.

Some of the most important writers of the Northern Renaissance include:

- Sir Thomas More (1478–1535) of England wrote his Utopia (which means “nowhere”) in 1516 to describe a fictional ideal society somewhere off the main land of the New World. In More’s Utopia, all children received an education in the Greco-Roman classics. There also was social equality since all profits from business and property were held in common. Utopia asserts that man, through his own efforts, can construct a perfect world. More’s ideas were original in that he contradicted the long-standing view that evil existed in society because man was basically corrupt. Instead, More maintained that the acquisition of private property promoted vice and corruption. If a society could reform or change the institution that molded an individual, society could improve. More played a major role in introducing humanism into England. He was decapitated in 1535 by Henry VIII for not supporting Henry’s break with the Catholic Church. In 1935 the Catholic Church made him a saint.
Politics of the Renaissance

Italy

During the Middle Ages, the test of a good government was whether it provided justice, law, and order. Politically, the Renaissance produced a different approach to power. During the Renaissance, the test of a good government was whether it was effective as well as able to increase the power of the ruler. The Florentine Niccolò Machiavelli (1469–1527) put this new approach into practice. Machiavelli served the Florentine Republic as secretary and diplomat but was dismissed from office when the Medici family came back to power in 1512. In an attempt to regain the favor of the government, Machiavelli wrote The Prince (1513), a virtual instruction manual for a prince or ruler on the manner in which he should rule. This major work, which focuses on ethics and government, describes how rulers maintain power by methods that ignore right or wrong. Rulers need to accept the philosophy that “the end justifies the means.” Machiavelli believed that politicians should manipulate people and use any means to gain power. He did not advocate amoral behavior but thought that a politician’s actions should not be governed by moral consideration. A prince had to combine the cunning of a fox and power of a lion to achieve his goals.

The most able practitioners of Machiavelli’s approach to politics were the fifteenth- and sixteenth-century monarchs: Louis XI of France, Henry VII and Henry VIII of England, and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain. These leaders acted according to the principles discussed in The Prince. They invested in their government a strong sense of authority and leadership. In the sixteenth century, Jean Bodin’s (1530–1596) work, The Six Books on the State, outlined the first systematic and clear conception that absolute sovereignty resided in the nation regardless of the forms of government. The “state” was an absolute sovereign that tolerated no rival legal authority above it except God. Bodin’s ideas would contribute to the rise of absolutism in Europe.

France

Although France won the Hundred Years’ War (1337–1453), a series of wars fought between France and England, the French country was left devastated. Farmland was destroyed and many French nobles lost their lives. Yet, the French monarchy became stronger since the war had weakened the power of the nobles. A revival of commerce, leading to the rise of the bourgeoisie (middle class), further strengthened the power of the king. Throughout the late fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries, the French kings consolidated their powers. Louis XI, who ruled from 1461 to 1483, was the most successful of these monarchs. He curbed feudal anarchy, set up an efficient government, and is considered to be the architect of French absolutism.

England

After the Hundred Years’ War, England struggled to rebuild its economy. Unfortunately, the end of this war led to a civil war, known as the War of the Roses, between the House of York (symbolized by a white rose) and the House of Lancaster (symbolized by a red rose). After a 30-year struggle (1455–1485) a Lancastrian, Henry Tudor, gained control of England and his line ruled England until the seventeenth century. Henry Tudor (Henry VII) re-established the monarch’s authority over the nobles and promoted trade and prosperity. His most famous accomplishment was the establishment of the Star Chamber, a court to check aristocratic power. There was no jury, and torture was a common remedy for all problems.

Spain

Spain, unlike France and England, was divided into many separate kingdoms. The various groups who lived on the peninsula lacked a common tradition. Muslims (Moors) and Jews had significantly influenced Spanish society. Until the 1100s, the Moors had controlled most of the country and many Jews had achieved high positions in finance, government, and medicine. The Reconquista represented a centuries-long attempt to unite Spain and expel Arabs and Jews. In 1469, Ferdinand V of Aragon (1452–1516) was married to Isabella of Castile (1451–1504), thus uniting the Christian kingdom of Spain. In 1492 (the same year that Columbus landed in America) the combined armies of these kingdoms drove the Moors from Granada and from Europe. Under their reign, Spain remained a loose confederation of separate states. Ferdinand and Isabella worked together to consolidate royal authority and to strengthen the Spanish kingdom. They used the hermandades, a local police force, to strengthen royal justice. The Church was also used as a vehicle of state authority. Ferdinand and Isabella revived the Inquisition in 1478, a religious court controlled by the monarchy. They monitored and persecuted persons suspected of heresy, especially converted Jews, known as the marranos or conversos. The Inquisition ultimately led to the expulsion of all Jews. Despite this sanctioned intolerance, by the end of their reign, Ferdinand and Isabella had established a strong central government, which enabled Spain to become a leader in the exploration of Asia and the discovery of the New World in the Americas.
Artistic Achievements of the Renaissance

Renaissance art has the following characteristics:

- It imitates the classical work of Greece/Rome and rejects the medieval forms of art.
- It is very realistic. Artists studied human anatomy in detail and worked from live models. They also created the technique of three-dimensional perspective.
- It portrays secular themes and glorifies the achievements of the individual.

Some Renaissance artists include the following:

- Giotto (1267–1337) was born in Florence and helped to make it the first great center of the Renaissance. He is famous for his frescoes (paintings on walls), such as St. Francis Preaching to the Birds. His realistic paintings replaced the artificial two-dimensional art represented in the the Middle Ages. He also designed a bell tower, usually called Giotto’s Tower, for the Cathedral of Florence.

- Lorenzo Ghiberti (1378–1455) was a Florentine sculptor. He is famous for the bronze doors of the Baptistery, a great cathedral in Florence. The ten panels on the door took 21 years to complete and depict realistic scenes from the Bible.

- Donatello (1386–1466) was the most influential Florentine artist before Michelangelo. He revived the classical figure of the nude body with its balance and self-awareness. His work, David, was the first nude statue of the Renaissance.

- Leonardo da Vinci (1452–1519) is known as a “Renaissance man,” a person expert in many fields who has a wide range of interests. He was a painter, sculptor, inventor, architect, musician, engineer, and scientist. He dissected human corpses to see how muscles and bones worked. His sketchbooks include plans for a flying machine and underwater boats. His paintings also include The Last Supper, which was painted with oil on a plaster wall. His most famous painting is the Mona Lisa.

- Michelangelo (1475–1564), like da Vinci, was skilled in many areas. He was a sculptor, engineer, poet, painter, and architect. His murals of biblical figures and scenes on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel are his most famous work. His sculptured masterpiece of the fourteen-foot statue of David in the city of Florence is considered a propaganda tool to inspire the citizens in their struggle against Milan. Michelangelo also carved the Pieta, showing Mary grieving over the dead Jesus, and designed the dome of St. Peter’s Church in Rome.

- Raphael (1438–1520) worked in Florence and Rome. He is considered to be the greatest painter of the Renaissance. Although he is famous for his beautiful Madonnas, especially Sister Madonna, his fresco, The School of Athens, is considered to be the greatest masterpiece of the Renaissance. Raphael’s realistic portrayal of Aristotle and Plato, combined with God, the Father, holding the globe and St. Augustine dictating the City of God, exemplify the realistic religious themes of the Renaissance. His use of proportion and perspective add to the quality of the fresco.
Frans Hals (c1580–1666) painted portraits of everyday life that captured the spirit of the Dutch people. His well-known work, The Laughing Cavalier, is probably one of the most reproduced paintings in art.

Rembrandt (1606–1669) is considered the greatest Dutch painter. He is famous for his realism and dramatic use of light and shade. His paintings include religious subjects and scenes from everyday life. His most famous works include the Night Watch and Aristotle Contemplating the Bust of Homer.

El Greco (The Greek) (1541–1614) was a Spanish artist. He painted religious scenes, such as The Assumption of the Virgin, and landscapes, such as View of Toledo.

Albrecht Dürer (1471–1528) was a German artist who is famous for his metal and wood engravings. His most noteworthy work is Praying Hands.

Raphael’s fresco, The School of Athens. © Ted Spiegel/CORBIS
Chronology of the Renaissance

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1337–1453</td>
<td>Hundred Years’ War between England and France. The war leaves both nations crippled.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1353</td>
<td>Boccaccio’s Decameron becomes the first great prose work of the Renaissance.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1390</td>
<td>Geoffrey Chaucer’s Canterbury Tales becomes one of the first works written in the vernacular, or language of the people, of the author’s homeland. England’s Chaucer had become familiar with the works of Dante and Boccaccio while traveling in Italy.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1434</td>
<td>Cosimo de Medici establishes his family’s dominance in Florence.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c.1450</td>
<td>German Johannes Gutenberg revolutionizes the world of the written word with the introduction of the movable type printing press.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1453</td>
<td>Ottoman Turks capture Constantinople; end of the Byzantine Empire.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1455–1485</td>
<td>The English House of York and House of Lancaster fight each other for political control in the War of the Roses.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1469</td>
<td>Marriage of Isabella of Castile and Ferdinand of Aragon.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1478</td>
<td>The Inquisition is introduced into Spain to control the activity of the marranos (Jews who had converted to Christianity).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1485</td>
<td>The Tudor dynasty is established in England with the end of the War of the Roses.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1492</td>
<td>Completion of the Reconquista; expulsion of the Jews from Spain.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1503–1506</td>
<td>Leonardo da Vinci labors on his signature piece, the Mona Lisa.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1508–1512</td>
<td>Michelangelo paints the Sistine Chapel ceiling.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1509</td>
<td>Erasmus publishes In Praise of Folly.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1513</td>
<td>Niccolo Machiavelli writes The Prince.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1516–1519</td>
<td>Desiderius Erasmus produces his Greek and Latin translations of the New Testament.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1527</td>
<td>The Sack of Rome by Holy Roman Emperor, Charles V.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Sample Multiple-Choice Questions

1. Which situation contributed most to the beginning of the Renaissance?
   A. Strong rulers censored new ideas.
   B. Europe became increasingly isolated from other regions.
   C. The emphasis on religious uniformity increased.
   D. A wealthy class that supported the arts emerged.
   E. Europe began to discover the writings of St. Thomas Aquinas.

2. An important characteristic of Renaissance Humanists was their emphasis on
   A. accepting ideas based on Confucian thought
   B. the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church
   C. magic and alchemy
   D. the idea that the glorification of the individual was sinful
   E. classical Roman and Greek writings

3. Which of these books describes Renaissance court life and behavior?
   A. Castiglione’s The Courtier
   B. Machiavelli’s The Prince
   C. Augustine’s City of God
   D. Boccaccio’s Decameron
   E. More’s Utopia

4. The intellectual and cultural center of the Renaissance was
   A. Florence
   B. Rome
   C. Naples
   D. Venice
   E. Genoa

5. The northern Humanists were different than the southern Humanists because they emphasized
   A. economic gain and materialism
   B. social reform based on Christian ideals
   C. pagan virtues
   D. scholastic dogma over reason
   E. emphasis on democracy as a political system

6. “The question arises about whether it is better to be loved more than feared or feared more than loved. The reply is that one ought to be both feared and loved, but it is much safer to be feared than loved.”
   Who would have supported the ideas contained in the above passage?
   A. John Locke
   B. Niccolo Machiavelli
   C. Sir Thomas More
   D. St. Augustine
   E. Castiglione
Part II: Subject Area Reviews with Sample Questions and Answers

7. Which is the best description of the War of the Roses?
   A. Civil wars between the English houses of York and Lancaster
   B. A war between England and France
   C. Civil wars between the English king, Henry VI, and the aristocracy
   D. Minor disputes among English gentry
   E. Struggles for democratic rights

8. A common theme running through Erasmus’ works was
   A. paganism
   B. Christian education for moral and intellectual improvement
   C. a monastic life of contemplation and divorce from the material world
   D. emphasis on formalism in religion
   E. disloyalty to the church

9. Renaissance men’s view of educated women was that they should
   A. be encouraged and given an equal place in society
   B. have a voice in the affairs of the city
   C. not be encouraged in any manner
   D. be allowed to add a social touch to the household, but otherwise remain subservient to men
   E. be treated as equals in all activities

10. A basic idea contained in Sir Thomas More’s Utopia was:
    A. Evil exists because men and women are basically corrupt.
    B. Political leaders must learn how to manipulate their subjects.
    C. Social order is only an unattainable ideal.
    D. Corruption and war are due to acquisitiveness and private property.
    E. Government derives power from a social contract with the people.
Answers to Multiple-Choice Questions and Explanations

1. D. In the fifteenth century a wealthy class of merchants and bankers, such as the Medici family who had amassed large fortunes in Florence, became the major sponsors of Renaissance artists. Art was used as a way to glorify the success of the sponsors and their families. Strong Renaissance rulers were more concerned with developing countries into nations than with censoring new ideas. The Catholic Church, however, was more concerned with censorship, such as in the case of Galileo and Copernicus. Religious uniformity declined in the Renaissance. Writers such as Erasmus criticized some of the abuses of the Church. These criticisms gave rise to the Protestant Reformation, which destroyed the religious unity of Europe. Humanism rejected the Scholastic philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas and focused on the writings of the Greeks and Romans. Europe became less isolated as it increased trade with Asia and explored new lands in the Americas.

2. E. Renaissance Humanists and writers emphasized classical Roman and Greek writings, examining the worldly subjects that the Romans and Greeks had studied. These Humanist writers hoped to use these ancient writings to increase their knowledge about their own times. Petrarch, a Humanist writer, saw the fourteenth century as a rebirth of ancient Roman culture. Humanism was not concerned with the ideas of Confucius nor with magic and alchemy. A basic tenet of Humanism was the importance of the individual as a unique personality capable of fulfilling all of his potential.

3. A. Castiglione’s The Courtier greatly influenced court behavior and was widely read by European gentlemen to learn the social mores and patterns of conduct for elite groups. Machiavelli’s The Prince, on the other hand, describes the politics of Renaissance Italy. St. Augustine’s City of God is an expression of Christian historical and religious thought in the third and fourth centuries C.E., which is by far the wrong time period. The Decameron is a collection of tales describing sensual and worldly society.

4. A. The first literary and artistic manifestation of the Renaissance appeared in Florence, which was an enormously wealthy city. Rome, Naples, Venice, and Genoa never dominated the cultural life of the Italian Renaissance like Florence and the Medici family who ruled during the city’s Golden Age.

5. B. The northern Humanists promoted social reform based on Christian ideals as a way to develop an ethical way of life combining the best elements of classical and Christian cultures. The Dutch writer Erasmus ridiculed upper class privileges in the hope of getting people to think about reforms in society. He stressed reason over scholastic dogma. Sir Thomas More of England wrote about an ideal country (Utopia) that was free from war, injustices, and poverty. His works did not consider democracy a viable form of government. The northern Humanists based their program on Christian ideals, not economic gain and materialism. They stressed biblical and Christian themes and not the pagan themes characterized by the Italian Renaissance.
6. B. Niccolo Machiavelli wrote The Prince describing the competitive politics of the Italian city-states. Machiavelli believed that a ruler had to use whatever means necessary to achieve success. For Machiavelli, power was achieved through fear, not by being well-loved. John Locke was an English philosopher who wrote Two Treatises on Government in 1690 to justify the Glorious Revolution, which ended absolutism in England. Sir Thomas More wrote Utopia about an ideal society. St. Augustine wrote The City of God describing how Christianity could lead to a world of peace and perfection.

7. A. The Wars of the Roses, the civil war between the houses of York (symbolized by the white rose) and Lancaster (the red rose) disrupted trade, agriculture, and domestic industry. The Wars of the Roses were a struggle between different feudal factions and not between the English king, Henry VI, and the aristocracy or among the English gentry. This civil war was not fought to promote democracy.

8. B. One of the fundamental themes in all of Erasmus' scholarly work was the importance of Christian education for moral and intellectual development. The Dutch Humanist Erasmus advocated the "philosophy of Christ, not paganism." Erasmus had been forced to enter a monastery as a young orphan and intensely disliked the monastic life. He did not advocate the formalism, ceremony, or laws of the Church. Even though Erasmus was extremely critical of the Church, he still remained loyal to it.

9. D. During the Renaissance, women did receive a better education, but this education was intended to adorn the home of the husband, not to challenge men intellectually. Renaissance men believed that educated women violated nature and thus ceased to be women. They felt they were a threat to male dominance and did not want them to have an equal place in society, a voice in the affairs of the city, or to be encouraged in any manner.

10. D. Sir Thomas More promoted the concept that corruption and war were due to society’s flawed institutions, such as ownership of private property. His approach was extremely radical in that he contended that society, not the inherently corrupt nature of humanity, was responsible for corruption. Machiavelli, not More, promoted that political leaders should learn how to manipulate their subjects. Exemplified by his Utopia, More believed that society could be perfected through the reform of the social institutions that mold the individual. John Locke and Jean Jacques Rousseau, not Sir Thomas More, promoted the belief that government was a contract between government and the people.